

Private Alphonso Boyd (Regimental Number 2745), having no known last resting-place, is commemorated beneath the Caribou in Beaumont-Hamel Memorial Park.

His occupation prior to enlistment recorded as that of a clerk earning an annual $400.00, Alphonso Boyd was a recruit of the Ninth Draft. Having presented himself for medical examination in St. John's on May 11, 1916, he also enlisted for the duration of the war - at the daily private soldier's rate of $1.10 - on the same May 11, before attesting on the following day, May 12.

Private Boyd sailed from St. John's on July 19 on board His Majesty's Transport *Sicilian (right). The ship - refitted some ten years previously to carry well over one thousand passengers - had left the Canadian port of Montreal on July 16, carrying Canadian military personnel.

It is likely that the troops disembarked in the English west-coast port-city of Liverpool; however, it is certain that upon disembarkation the contingent journeyed north by train to Scotland and to the Regimental Depot.

Some sixteen years previously - as of 1899 when she was launched - the vessel had served as a troop-ship and transport during another conflict, carrying men, animals and equipment to South Africa for use during the Second Boer War.*

The Regimental Depot had been established during the summer of 1915 in the Royal Borough of Ayr on the west coast of Scotland, there to serve as the base for the 2nd (Reserve) Battalion. It was from there - as of November of 1915 and up until January of 1918 - that the new-comers arriving from home were despatched in drafts, at first to Gallipoli and later to the Western Front, to bolster the four fighting companies of 1st Battalion.

(Right above: an aerial view of Ayr - probably from the period between the Wars: Newton-on Ayr is to the left of the River Ayr and the Royal Borough is to the right. - courtesy of the Carnegie Library at Ayr)

(continued)

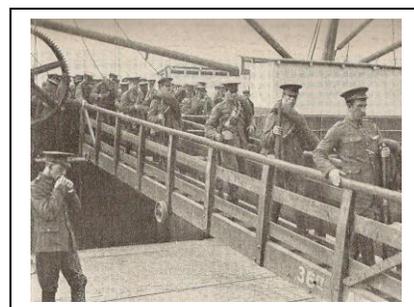

At the outset there had been problems at Ayr to accommodate the new arrivals – plus men from other regiments who were still being billeted in the area – but by the spring of 1916, things had been satisfactorily settled: the officers were in Wellington Square in Ayr itself, and the other ranks had been billeted at Newton Park School and either in the grandstand or in a tented camp at the racecourse in the suburb of Newton-upon-Ayr.

(Right above: the new race-course at Newton-upon-Ayr - opened in 1907 – where the men of the Regiment were sometimes billeted and where they replaced some of the turf with a vegetable garden; part of the present grandstand is original – photograph from 2012)

The 11th Re-enforcement Draft – Private Boyd among its ranks - passed through the English south-coast port of Southampton on October 3 of 1916 on its way to the Continent and to the Western Front.

The contingent disembarked in the Norman capital of Rouen on the next day, October 4, and spent time at the large British Expeditionary Force Base Depot located there, in final training and organization*, before making its way to a rendezvous with 1st Battalion.

(Right: British troops disembark at Rouen on their way to the Western Front. – from Illustration)

Apparently, the standard length of time for this final training at the outset of the war had been ten days – although this was to become more and more flexible as the War progressed - in areas near Rouen, Étaples, LeHavre and Harfleur that became known notoriously to the troops as the Bull Rings.*

The contingent with which Private Boyd reported for duty in the field was a large detachment of two-hundred sixty-six other ranks which arrived from Rouen at the Battalion transport lines on October 12. This was also the day on which 1st Battalion made its attack on the enemy positions at Gueudecourt, again sustaining heavy casualties – two-hundred thirty-nine all told - and gaining little.

Thus it was that the new-comers remained behind the lines until the 14th, two days later, when they were moved up to Switch Trench and parcelled out to the Battalion's four depleted fighting companies. Consequently, the date of their arrival is often recorded not as October 12 but as October 14.

(Right: This is the ground over which 1st Battalion advanced and then mostly conceded at Gueudecourt on October 12. Some few managed to reach the area where today stand the copse of trees and the Gueudecourt Caribou, on the far right horizon. This is also the area of the positions into which the re-enforcements of October 12-14 were posted. – photograph from 2007)

For the remainder of that autumn of 1916, 1st Battalion remained in the same area of the Somme and was regularly into and out of the trenches. There were no infantry engagements, but the incessant artillery action ensured a steady stream of casualties.

The Newfoundlanders would be withdrawn from active service on or about December 12 and were to spend the following six weeks or so encamped well behind the lines and close to the city of Amiens.

(Right: a British encampment somewhere on the Continent, apparently during the winter season – from a vintage post-card)

After that welcome six-week Christmas-time respite away from the front lines, the Newfoundlanders of 1st Battalion officially returned to active service on January 23, although they had been back in the trenches already by that date and had incurred their first casualties – and fatality – of 1917.

The only infantry activity involving 1st Battalion during that entire period – from the action in mid-October of 1916 at Gueudecourt, until Monchy-le-Preux in April of 1917 – was to be the sharp engagement at Sailly-Saillisel at the end of February and the beginning of March, an action which brought this episode in the Newfoundlanders' War – in the area of the Somme - to a close.

(Right above: The fighting during the time of the Battalion's posting to Sailly-Saillisel took place on the far side of the village which was no more than a heap of rubble at the time. - photograph from 2009(?))

After the infantry affair at Sailly-Saillisel, the month of March was a quiet time for the Newfoundlanders; having departed from the trenches, they now spent their time near the communities of Meaulté and Camps-en-Amienois re-enforcing, re-organizing, and training for upcoming events. They even had the pleasure of a visit from the Regimental Band, and also one from the Prime Minister of Newfoundland, Sir Edward Morris (right), the latter on March 17, St. Patrick's Day.

On March 29, 1st Battalion began to make its way – on foot – from Camps-en-Amienois to the north-east, towards the venerable medieval city of Arras and eventually beyond, on to the village of Monchy-le-Preux.

(Right: the remnants of the Grande Place in the city of Arras in early 1916 – from Illustration)

(continued)

On April 9 the British Army launched an offensive in the area to the north of the Somme battlefields; this was the so-called Battle of Arras intended to support a French effort elsewhere. In terms of the daily count of casualties it was the most expensive operation of the War for the British, its only positive episode being the Canadian assault of Vimy Ridge on the opening day of the battle, Easter Monday.

The French offensive was a disaster.

(Above right: the Canadian National Memorial which stands on Vimy Ridge – photograph from 2010)

1st Battalion was to play its part in the Battle of Arras, a role that would begin at a place called Monchy-le-Preux on April 14 and which would finish ten days later, on April 23, perhaps a kilometre distant, at Les Fosses Farm. After Beaumont-Hamel, Monchy-le-Preux was to prove to be the most costly day of the Newfoundlanders' war, four-hundred eighty-seven casualties on April 14 alone.

(Right above: The village of Monchy-le-Preux as seen today from the western – in 1917, the British – side of the community. The Newfoundlanders advanced, out of the ruins of the place, to the east, away from the camera. – photograph from 2013)

The son of Edward W. Boyd, fisherman – to whom he had allotted a daily seventy cents from his pay - and Elizabeth Boyd of Tizzard's Harbour in Notre Dame Bay, he was also brother to Robert.

Private Boyd was reported as missing in action on April 14, 1917, while serving in 'C' Company in the fighting at Monchy-le-Preux. Some thirty weeks later, on November 17, he was officially presumed dead.

Alphonso Boyd had enlisted at the age of eighteen years and five months.

(Right above: The Caribou at Monchy-le-Preux stands atop the vestiges of a German strongpoint in the centre of the re-constructed community. – photograph from 2009(?))

(Right: A family memorial which stands in Tizzard's Harbour United Church Cemetery commemorates the sacrifice of Private Boyd. – photograph from 2013)

(continued)

Private Alphonso Boyd was entitled to the British War Medal (on left) and also to the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal).

Hon J R Bennett

August 29 1917

Dear Sir

Could you find out and let me know if any report from Pte Alphonso Boyd have been received. Since Missing April 14 I have written the other side But up to the time of Writing You I have not heard from them or could you Put me in touch of Some Parties I could write to for information a reply will oblige

Yours very truly
Robert Boyd