

Sergeant Thomas Carroll (Regimental Number 274) is interred in Hawthorn Ridge Cemetery No. 2, Auchonvillers: Grave reference A. 40.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a miner previously working for twenty-one cents per hour with the Dominion Iron and Steel Company on Bell Island, Thomas Carroll presented himself there for medical examination on August 26, 1914, a procedure which was to find him...fit for foreign service.

(continued)

During the week that followed, Thomas Carroll made the short crossing from Bell Island to St. John's, capital city of the Dominion of Newfoundland, where, on September 2, he enlisted – engaged at the daily private soldier's rate of $1.10 (including a daily ten-cent field allowance) – at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury on Harvey Road. He was to be a recruit of the First Draft.

During the four weeks plus a day that now followed, the new recruits were to undertake training. Having then attested on October 1, Private Carroll embarked with the others of The First Five Hundred on October 3 onto the Bowring Brothers' vessel Florizel awaiting in St. John's Harbour.

The ship sailed on the morrow to its rendezvous off the south coast of the Island where she was to join the convoy transporting the 1st Canadian Division across the Atlantic.

(Right above: The image of Florizel at anchor in the harbour at St. John's is by courtesy of Admiralty House Museum.)

In the United Kingdom Private Carroll trained with the Newfoundland contingent: firstly in southern England; then in Scotland at Fort George – on the Moray Firth close to Inverness; at Edinburgh Castle – where it provided the first garrison from outside the British Isles; and later again at the tented Stobs Camp near the town of Hawick to the south-east of Edinburgh.

(Right above: Fort George, constructed in the latter half of the eighteenth century, still serves the British Army to this day. – photograph from 2011)

(Right: The Newfoundland Regiment parades at Stobs Camp and is presented with its Colours on June 10, 1915. – courtesy of Reverend Wilson Tibbo and Mrs. Lillian Tibbo)

At the beginning of that August of 1915, the four senior Companies, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D', were then sent south to undergo a final two weeks of training, as well as an inspection by the King, at Aldershot; meanwhile the two junior Companies, the later-arrived 'E' and 'F*', were sent to Scotland's west coast, to Ayr, where they were to provide the nucleus of the newly-forming 2nd (Reserve) Battalion.

(Right: George V, by the Grace of God, of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, Emperor of India – photograph from Bain News Services via Wikipedia)

(continued)

On July 10, 1915, 'F' Company had arrived at Stobs Camp from Newfoundland, its personnel raising the numbers of the unit to battalion establishment strength, and thus permitting it to be ordered to active service. The 1st Battalion, Newfoundland Regiment, comprising those four Companies, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D', was thereupon attached to the 88th Brigade of the 29th Division of the (British) Mediterranean Expeditionary Force.

It had then been during the period spent at Aldershot that Private Carroll of 'A' Company – he was not alone in doing so - had been prevailed upon, he on August 14, to re-enlist for the duration of the war*.

At the outset of the War, perhaps because it was felt by the authorities that it would be a conflict of short duration, the recruits enlisted for only a single year. As the War progressed, however, this was obviously going to cause problems and the men were encouraged to re-enlist.

(Right above: Some of the men of 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D' Companies of the 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment at Aldershot in August of 1915 – from The Fighting Newfoundlander by Col. G.W.L. Nicholson, C.D.)

(Right: The image of Megantic, in peace-time a 'White Star Line' vessel, is from the Old Ship Picture Galleries web-site.)

On August 20, 1915, Private Carroll and his comrades-in-arms embarked in the Royal Navy Harbour of Devonport onto the requisitioned passenger-liner Megantic for passage to the Middle East and to the fighting against the Turks where, a month later – having spent two weeks billeted in British barracks in the Egyptian capital, Cairo - on September 20, he disembarked with the 1st Battalion at Suvla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

(Right above: Kangaroo Beach, where the officers and men of the 1st Battalion, Newfoundland Regiment, landed on the night of September 19-20, 1915, is to be seen in the distance at the far end of Suvla Bay. The remains of a landing-craft are still clearly visible in the foreground on 'A' Beach. – photograph taken in 2011)

(Right above: Newfoundland troops on board a troop-ship anchored at Mudros: either Megantic on August 29, Ausonia on September 18, or Prince Abbas on September 19 – Whichever the case, they were yet to land on Gallipoli. – from Provincial Archives)

(continued)

Not only the landing at Suvla Bay but the campaign itself was to be a debacle: Flies, dust, disease, frost-bite, floods – and the casualties inflicted by an enemy who was to fight a great deal better than the British High Command* had ever anticipated – were eventually to overwhelm the British-led forces and it would be decided to abandon not only Suvla Bay but the entire Gallipoli venture.

Many of the commanders chosen were second-rate, had been brought out of retirement, and had little idea of how to fight – let alone of how to win. One of the generals at Suvla, apparently, had handed in his resignation during the Campaign and had just gone home.*

(Right above: A century later, the area, little changed from those far-off days, of the Newfoundland positions at Suvla, and where Private Carroll was to serve in the fall of 1915 – photograph from 2011)

On the night of December 19-20, the British abandoned the area of Suvla Bay – the Newfoundlanders, the only non-British unit to serve there, to form a part of the rear-guard. Some of the Battalion personnel was evacuated to the nearby island of Imbros, some to Lemnos, further away, but in neither case was the respite to be of a long duration; the 1st Battalion was transferred only two days later to the area of Cape Helles, on the western tip of the Gallipoli Peninsula.

(Right above: Cape Helles as seen from the Turkish positions on the misnamed Achi Baba, positions which were never breached. The Newfoundland positions were to the right-hand side of the picture. – photograph from 2011)

The British and the Anzac forces – the Australian and New Zealand Army Corps also served at Gallipoli – were now only marking time until a complete withdrawal of the Peninsula was undertaken. The operation took place on the night of January 8-9, the Newfoundland Battalion providing some of the rear-guard for this second occasion as well*.

(Right above: 'W' Beach at Cape Helles as it was just days before the final British evacuation – from Illustration)

Lieutenant Owen Steele of St. John's, Newfoundland, is cited as having been the last soldier of the Mediterranean Expeditionary Force to step into the final small boat to sail from the Gallipoli Peninsula.*

(Right above: 'W' Beach almost a century after its abandonment by British forces and by the Newfoundlanders who were the last soldiers off the beach: vestiges of the wharves in the black-and-white picture are still to be seen. – photograph from 2011)

(Right: The British destroy their supplies during the final evacuation of the Gallipoli Peninsula. The men of the 1st Battalion were among the last to leave on two occasions, at Suvla Bay and at Cape Helles. – photograph taken from the battleship Cornwallis from Illustration)

When the British evacuated the entire Gallipoli Peninsula in January of 1916, Private Carroll and the 1st Battalion were ordered to the Egyptian port-city of Alexandria, arriving there on the 15th of that month. The Newfoundlanders were then immediately transferred by train southward to Suez, one of the ports at the southern end of the Canal which bears the same name, there to await further orders as, at the time, the subsequent destination of the 1st Battalion's 29th Division had not yet been decided*.

Bulgaria had entered the conflict on the side of the Central Powers and Salonika was soon to become a theatre of war.

(Right above: Port Tewfiq at the south end of the Suez Canal just prior to the Great War – from a vintage post-card)

It was during this time at Suez that, on February 27, Private Carroll received promotion directly* to the rank of corporal.

There is a single solitary paper that records his promotion from the rank of lance corporal to that of corporal but nowhere among his papers is there any further mention of an initial appointment to lance corporal. What is documented is that he arrived at Gallipoli still with the rank of private soldier.

(Right: British troops march through the port area of the French city of Marseilles. – from a vintage postcard)

After a two-month interim, on March 14, the Newfoundlanders embarked through Port Tewfiq, also at the southern end of the Suez Canal, for the French port of Marseilles, and disembarked there on March 22, en route to the Western Front.

Some three days after the unit's disembarkation on March 22, the Newfoundland Battalion's train arrived at the small provincial town of Pont-Rémy, a thousand kilometres to the north of Marseilles. It had been a cold, miserable journey*, the blankets provided for the troops having travelled unused in a separate wagon. De-training at the local station at two in the morning, the Newfoundlanders still faced a long march ahead of them before they would reach their billets at Buigny l'Abbé.

(Right: The River Somme as seen from the bridge at Pont-Rémy – photograph from 2010)

It is doubtful if many of those tired soldiers were to pay much attention to the slow-moving stream flowing under the bridge over which they were marching on their way from the station. But some three months later the Somme would have become a part of their history.

On April 13, Corporal Carroll's 1st Battalion paraded into the village of Englebelmer – perhaps some fifty kilometres in all from Pont-Rémy. There its personnel would be billeted, would receive re-enforcements and, in two days' time, would be introduced into the trenches of the Western Front.

Only days later again, two Companies – 'A', that of Corporal Carroll, and 'B' – were to take over some support positions from a British unit* before the entire Newfoundland unit moved up into forward positions on April 22.

It should be said that the Newfoundland Battalion and two-hundred men of the Bermuda Rifles who were serving at the time in the 2nd Lincolnshire Regiment Battalion, were the only units at the Somme from outside the British Isles. This was also true on the day of the attack on July 1.*

For the remainder of the spring of 1916, the Newfoundlanders were to be preparing for the British campaign of that upcoming summer, the battles to be fought on the ground named for the innocuous, meandering river flowing through the region, and over which the parent unit of the 1st Battalion had marched only some few weeks previously at Pont-Rémy: the Somme.

On June 11, while the 1st Battalion was billeted out of the line at Louvencourt, Corporal Carroll was further promoted, to the rank of sergeant. The Regimental War Diarist of the day makes no particular mention of it, merely noting that the Newfoundlanders at the time were undergoing special training.

(Right: A part of the re-constructed trench system in the Memorial Park at Beaumont-Hamel – photograph from 2007(?))

If there is one name and date in Newfoundland history which is etched in the collective once-national memory, it is that of Beaumont-Hamel on July 1 of 1916; and if any numbers are remembered they are those of the eight-hundred who went over the top in the third wave of the attack on that morning, and of the sixty-eight unwounded present at muster some twenty-four hours later*.

Perhaps ironically, the majority of the Battalion's casualties was to be incurred during the advance from the third line of British trenches to the first line from where the attack proper was to be made, and while struggling through British wire laid to protect the British positions from any German attack.*

(continued)

(Preceding page: Beaumont-Hamel: Looking from the British lines down the hill to Y Ravine Cemetery which today stands atop part of the German front-line defences: The Danger Tree is to the right in the photograph. – photograph taken in 2009*)

On July 1, 1916, the Y Ravine had formed a part of the German front-line defences.*

There are other numbers of course: the fifty-seven thousand British casualties incurred in four hours on that same morning of which nineteen-thousand were recorded as having been killed in action or died of wounds. It was to be the largest disaster ever in the annals of the British Army...and, perhaps just as depressing, the butchery of the Somme was to continue for the next four and a half months.

(Right: Beaumont-Hamel is a commune, not a village. – photographs from 2010 & 2015)

In fact, Beaumont-Hamel was a commune – it still exists today – at the time comprising two communities: Beaumont, a village on the German side of the lines, and Hamel which was behind those of the British. No-Man's-Land, on which the Newfoundland Memorial Park lies partially today, was on land that separated Beaumont from Hamel.

The son Thomas Carroll and Ellen Carroll of Harbour Grace, his own place of residence was recorded as Bell Island where he lived with his wife, Elizabeth, and with their four children: James, Ellen, Agnes and the eldest, Bernard, to whom he had allotted a daily sixty cents from his pay.

Sergeant Carroll was at first reported as missing in action at Beaumont-Hamel on July 1, 1916, while serving with 'A' Company during the fighting on the first day of the Somme.

However, a subsequent report submitted by the General Officer Commanding 5th Corps, reported his identification and burial on or about July 14, 1917. His record was thus amended so as to read killed in action.

Thomas Carroll had enlisted at the declared age of thirty-seven years: date of birth in Harbour Grace, Newfoundland, October, 1874 (baptism October 18, 1874) (from Harbour Grace Roman Catholic Parish Records).

(Right above: A grim, grainy image purporting to be Newfoundland dead awaiting burial after the action at Beaumont-Hamel – from ...)

(The photograph of Sergeant Carroll is from the Provincial Archives.)

(continued)

Sergeant Thomas Carroll was entitled to the 1914-1915 Star, as well as the British War Medal (centre) and the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal) (right).

