

Private Dorman Clarke (Regimental Number 2387) lies in Grove Town British Cemetery, Meaulté – Grave reference III. C. 25.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a paper-maker working for the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company in Grand Falls, Dorman Clarke was a recruit of the Ninth Draft. Having presented himself for medical examination at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury in St. John's on March 31, 1916, he then enlisted for the duration of the war – engaged at the daily private soldier's rate of $1.10 – and also attested, both on the following day, April 1.

Private Clarke sailed from St. John's on July 19 on board His Majesty's Transport *Sicilian (right). The ship - refitted some ten years previously to carry well over one thousand passengers - had left the Canadian port of Montreal on July 16, carrying Canadian military personnel.

(continued)

It is likely that the troops disembarked in the English west-coast port-city of Liverpool; however, it is certain that upon disembarkation the contingent journeyed north by train to Scotland and to the Regimental Depot.

Some sixteen years previously - as of 1899 when she was launched – the vessel had served as a troop-ship and transport during another conflict, carrying men, animals and equipment to South Africa for use during the Second Boer War.*

The Regimental Depot had been established during the summer of 1915 in the Royal Borough of Ayr on the west coast of Scotland, there to serve as the base for the 2nd (Reserve) Battalion. It was from there – as of November of 1915 and up until January of 1918 – that the new-comers arriving from home were despatched in drafts, at first to Gallipoli and later to the Western Front, to bolster the four fighting companies of 1st Battalion.

(Right above: an aerial view of Ayr – probably from the period between the Wars: Newton-upon-Ayr is to the left of the River Ayr and the Royal Borough is to the right. – courtesy of the Carnegie Library at Ayr)

At the outset there had been problems at Ayr to accommodate the new arrivals – plus men from other regiments who were still being billeted in the area – but by the spring of 1916, things had been satisfactorily settled: the officers were in Wellington Square in Ayr itself, and the other ranks had been billeted at Newton Park School and either in the grandstand or in a tented camp at the racecourse in the suburb of Newton-upon-Ayr.

(Right above: the new race-course at Newton-upon-Ayr - opened in 1907 – where the men of the Regiment were sometimes billeted and where they replaced some of the turf with a vegetable garden; part of the present grandstand is original – photograph from 2012)

The 11th Re-enforcement Draft – Private Clarke among its ranks - passed through the English south-coast port of Southampton on October 3 of 1916 on its way to the Continent and to the Western Front.

The contingent disembarked in the Norman capital of Rouen on the next day, October 4, and spent time at the large British Expeditionary Force Base Depot located there, in final training and organization*, before making its way to a rendezvous with 1st Battalion.

(Right: British troops disembark at Rouen on their way to the Western Front. – from Illustration)

(continued)

*Apparently, the standard length of time for this final training at the outset of the war had been ten days – although this was to become more and more flexible as the War progressed - in areas near Rouen, Étaples, LeHavre and Harfleur that became known notoriously to the troops as the Bull Rings.

The contingent with which Private Clarke reported for duty in the field was a large detachment of two-hundred sixty-six other ranks which arrived from Rouen at the Battalion transport lines on October 12. This was also the day on which 1st Battalion made its attack on the enemy positions at Gueudecourt, again sustaining heavy casualties – two-hundred thirty-nine all told - and gaining little.

Thus it was that the new-comers remained behind the lines until the 14th, two days later, when they were moved up to Switch Trench and parcelled out to the Battalion's four depleted fighting companies. Consequently, the date of their arrival is often recorded not as October 12 but as October 14.

(Right: This is the ground over which 1st Battalion advanced and then mostly conceded at Gueudecourt on October 12. Some few managed to reach the area where today stand the copse of trees and the Gueudecourt Caribou, on the far right horizon. This is also the area of the positions into which the re-enforcements of October 12-14 were posted. – photograph from 2007)

After the episode of October 12 at Gueudecourt, 1st Battalion had remained in the same area of the Somme and was regularly into and out of the trenches. There were to be no infantry engagements, but the incessant artillery action ensured a steady stream of casualties. The Newfoundlanders would be withdrawn from active service on or about December 12 and were to spend the following six weeks or so encamped well behind the lines and close to the city of Amiens.

(Right above: a British encampment somewhere on the Continent, apparently during the winter season – from a vintage post-card)

After that welcome six-week Christmas-time respite away from the front lines, the Newfoundlanders of 1st Battalion officially returned to active service on January 23, although they had been back in the trenches already by that date and had incurred their first casualties – and fatality – of 1917.

The only infantry activity involving 1st Battalion during that entire period – from the action in mid-October of 1916 at Gueudecourt, until Monchy-le-Preux in April of 1917 – was to be the sharp engagement at Sailly-Saillisel at the end of February and the beginning of March, an action which brought this episode in the Newfoundlanders' War – in the area of the Somme - to a close. It was to end Private Clarke's war as well.

(Previous page: The fighting during the time of the Battalion's posting to Sailly-Saillisel took place on the far side of the village which was no more than a heap of rubble at the time. - photograph from 2009(?))

(Right: A soldier of the Lancashire Fusiliers stands in the cold of the trenches at Sailly-Saillisel apparently enjoying a cigarette, during the late winter of 1916-1917, just prior to the arrival there of the Newfoundlanders who relieved them. – from Illustration)

On March 1, while serving with 'D' Company during that action at Sailly-Saillisel, Private Clarke was wounded, the Regimental War Diary recording ...Enemy artillery & snipers active... Casualties: 1 OR killed, 1 Officer & 6 OR wounded. Having sustained injuries inflicted by gun-fire to a knee and to both legs, he was evacuated to the 55th (2/2 London) Casualty Clearing Station at Grovetown near the community of Meaulté.

The son of Amos Clarke, former fisherman from Twillingate, and Patience Clarke – to whom he had allocated a daily allowance of fifty cents from his pay - of Botwood (later of 3, Spencer Street in St. John's) he was also brother to at least Allen.

Private Clarke was reported as having died of wounds in the same 55th (2/2 London) CCS on March 4, 1917. He was buried by the Reverend J. M. Forbes, attached to the 34th CCS.

Dorman Clarke had enlisted at the age of twenty years and two months.

(Right: a British casualty clearing station – the one pictured here under canvas for mobility if and when necessary – being established somewhere on the Continent – from a vintage post-card)

Private Dorman Clarke was entitled to the British War Medal (on left) and also to the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal).

