

Lance Corporal Thomas Patrick Dunphy (Regimental Number 2155), having no known last resting-place, is commemorated beneath the Caribou in Beaumont-Hamel Memorial Park.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a paper-maker at the Anglo-Newfoundland Development Company in Grand Falls, Thomas Dunphy was a recruit of the Eighth Draft. Having presented himself for medical examination at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury in St. John's on February 17 of 1916, he then enlisted – engaged at the daily private soldier's rate of $1.10 – on February 23, before attesting on the following day, the 24th.

**Another source has him attesting on the day that he enlisted.*

It was to be some four weeks before Private Dunphy was to embark for overseas service to the United Kingdom. It was as a soldier of the second contingent of 'H' Company that he took ship for overseas service on board His Majesty's Transport Sicilian* (right) in St. John's Harbour on March 23-24. The ship did not sail from Newfoundland until the 25th and likely crossed the Atlantic in convoy.

This would explain what was apparently a slow voyage<sup>**</sup>: Private Dunphy did not disembark in the United Kingdom until April 9, at which time the contingent was transported to the Regimental Depot in Scotland.

**Some sixteen years previously - as of 1899 when she was launched – the vessel, originally built for the Allan Line, had been requisitioned as a troop-ship and transport carrying men, animals and equipment to South Africa for use during the Second Boer War.*

\*Convoys often altered course and obviously had to travel at the speed of the slowest ship. Sicilian would also have had to sail to a rendezvous point to meet the accompanying vessels – a convoy left Halifax on March 31-April 1 to arrive in Liverpool on April 9.*

It could also be that she embarked some Canadian troops before crossing the Atlantic as she could carry well over one-thousand passengers with ease.

(continued)

The Regimental Depot had been established during the summer of 1915 in the Royal Borough of Ayr on the west coast of Scotland, there to serve as a base for the 2nd (Reserve) Battalion. It was from there – as of November of 1915 and up until January of 1918 – that the new-comers arriving from home were despatched in drafts, at first to Gallipoli and later to the Western Front, to bolster the four fighting companies of 1st Battalion.

(Right above: an aerial view of Ayr – probably from the period between the Wars: Newton-on Ayr is to the left of the River Ayr and the Royal Borough is to the right. – courtesy of the Carnegie Library at Ayr)

During the winter of 1915-1916 the men of the 2nd (Reserve) Battalion had been lodged in several venues, at a nearby military camp at Gales, but also as far afield as Paisley Barracks, some sixty-five kilometres distant. However, by the spring of 1916 the difficulty had been overcome by housing the men in a requisitioned school, in a tented community and in the Ayr Racecourse Grandstand, all in the district of Newton-upon-Ayr.

(Right above: the new race-course at Ayr - opened in 1907 – where the men of the Regiment were sometimes billeted and where they replaced some of the turf with a vegetable garden; part of the present grandstand is original – photo from 2012)

It was while at the Racecourse at Newton-on-Ayr, on June 30, that Private Dunphy re-enlisted, some nine days before his departure for the Continent.

**At the outset of the War, perhaps because it was felt by the authorities that it would be a conflict of short duration, the recruits enlisted for only a single year. As the War progressed, however, this was obviously going to cause problems and the men were encouraged to re-enlist.*

July 9 saw the 8th Re-enforcement Draft – Private Dunphy among its ranks - pass through the English south-coast port of Southampton on its way to France. On the day following, the 10th, it disembarked in Rouen, capital city of Normandy, and made its way to the large British Expeditionary Force Base Depot, there to undergo final training and organization* before moving to a rendezvous with the parent unit.

(Above right: British troops disembark at Rouen on their way to the Western Front. – from Illustration)

**Apparently, the standard length of time for this final training at the outset of the war had been ten days – although this was to become more and more flexible as the War progressed - in areas near Rouen, Étapes, LeHavre and Harfleur that became known notoriously to the troops as the Bull Rings.*

There must have been a sense of urgency at the time: 1st Battalion had suffered terribly at a place called Beaumont-Hamel on the morning of July 1, and on July 6 its depleted strength, as reported by the Regimental War Diarist, still numbered no more than one-hundred sixty-eight other ranks, less than twenty per cent of the regulation strength of a British battalion.

Private Dunphy was one of the contingent of one-hundred twenty-six other ranks from Rouen to report to duty with 1st Battalion on July 21 in the small community of Acheux. 1st Battalion had marched to there from the trenches in front of Maily-Maillet four days prior, and would continue this march as far as Beauval on the 23rd where they were to be billeted for only forty-eight hours before covering – still on foot – a further twenty kilometres to Candas on the 26th to board a train.

On July 27-28 of 1916, 1st Battalion - still under battalion strength at only five-hundred fifty-four strong, even after re-enforcement - moved north and entered into Belgium for the first time. It had been ordered to the Ypres Salient, one of the most dangerous pieces of real estate on the entire Western Front, there to continue to re-enforce and to re-organize after the ordeal of Beaumont-Hamel.

(Right above: the entrance to 'A' Company's quarters in the ramparts of Ypres when it was posted there in 1916 – photograph from 2010)

The Salient was relatively quiet during the time of the Newfoundlanders' posting there, yet they nonetheless incurred casualties, a number of them fatalities. On October 8, after ten weeks in Belgium, 1st Battalion was to move south, back to France and back to the area of – and the battle of – the Somme.

(Right: the city of Ypres towards the end of 1915 – and eight months before the Newfoundlanders were posted there for the first time – from a vintage post-card)

Only four days after its return to France, 1st Battalion was ordered to pass to the offensive, on this occasion on the outskirts of the ruined village of Gueudecourt perhaps a dozen kilometres or so to the south-east of Beaumont-Hamel. Here, on October 12 – and during a heavy enemy bombardment of the previous evening – the Newfoundlanders lost heavily – two-hundred thirty-nine on those two days alone - and again achieved little for their sacrifice.

(Right above: This is the ground over which 1st Battalion advanced and then mostly conceded at Gueudecourt on October 12. Some few managed to reach the area where today stand the copse of trees and the Gueudecourt Caribou, on the far right horizon. – photograph from 2007)

After the action at Gueudecourt in mid-October, 1st Battalion had continued its watch in and out of the trenches of the Somme – not without casualties – during the late fall and early winter, a period to be broken only by promotion for Private Dunphy to the rank of lance corporal on November 7, with its accompanying pay-raise of five cents per diem, and then by the several weeks – as of December 11-12 - spent in Corps Reserve during the Christmas period, the Newfoundlanders being withdrawn well behind the lines and encamped close to the city of Amiens.

(Right above: a typical British Army Camp during a winter period somewhere in France – from a vintage post-card)

After that welcome six-week Christmas-time respite away from the Front, the Newfoundlanders officially returned to active service on January 23, although they had been back in the trenches already by that date and had incurred their first casualties – and fatality – of 1917.

The only infantry activity involving 1st Battalion during that entire period – from the action in mid-October of 1916 at Gueudecourt, until Monchy-le-Preux in April of 1917 – was to be the sharp engagement at Sully-Saillisel at the end of February and the beginning of March, an action which brought this episode in the Newfoundlanders' War – in the area of the Somme - to a close.

It was also to be the end of Lance Corporal Dunphy's war.

(Right above: The fighting during the time of the Battalion's posting to Sully-Saillisel took place on the far side of the village which was no more than a heap of rubble at the time. - photograph from 2009(?))

(Right: A soldier of the Lancashire Fusiliers stands in the cold of the trenches at Sully-Saillisel apparently enjoying a cigarette, during the late winter of 1916-1917, just prior to the arrival there of the Newfoundlanders who relieved them. – from Illustration)

The son of John Thomas Dunphy and Maria Dunphy* (née Walsh) - to whom he had allocated a daily allowance of seventy cents from his pay - of Dunville, Placentia (later of 95, King's Road, St. John's), he was also brother to Margaret-Mary, to May Genevieve, to Theresa-Evangelist and also likely to John.

(continued)

Lance Corporal Dunphy was reported as having been killed in action on March 2, 1917, while serving with 'C' Company, probably during the heavy enemy bombardment of the day, at Sailly-Saillisel, in the French Département de la Somme. At home it was the Reverend Monsignor Reardon who was requested to bear the news to his family.

Thomas Dunphy had enlisted at eighteen years and ten months of age: date of birth, March 18, 1897.

(Right above: The War Memorial in Placentia honours the sacrifice of Lance Corporal Dunphy. – photograph from 2013)

(The photograph of Private Dunphy is from the Provincial Archives.)

(Right: The Cenotaph in the community of Grand Falls – Windsor also honours the sacrifice of Lance Corporal Dunphy. – photograph fom 2010)

Lance Corporal Thomas Patrick Dunphy was entitled to the British War Medal (on left) and also the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal).

