

Private George Emberly (also Emberley) (Regimental Number 2994), having no known last resting-place, is commemorated beneath the Caribou in Beaumont-Hamel Memorial Park.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a fisherman earning an annual two hundred dollars, George Emberly was a recruit of the Twelfth Draft. Having presented himself for medical examination at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury in St. John's on July 27, 1916, he then also enlisted – for the duration of the war and engaged at the private soldier's rate of $1.10 per diem – and attested on that same July 27.

Private Emberly was one of the approximately three hundred twenty all ranks to leave St. John's for overseas service on the Bowring Brothers' vessel Florizel (right), bound for Halifax, on January 31, 1917, from there to take ship to the United Kingdom.

Immediately upon its arrival in Nova Scotia, however, this detachment was forwarded to accommodation in the town of Windsor where it was soon to be quarantined because of an epidemic of measles and mumps.

It was not before a lapse of some two-and-a-half months since its arrival that transport could be arranged for the trans-Atlantic crossing to the United Kingdom for the so-called Windsor Draft – minus the twenty-five or so personnel still unable to travel.

On April 17, Private Emberly embarked onto His Majesty's Transport Ausonia (right), one of three ships carrying the Newfoundlanders to sail on the next day in a convoy from Halifax. The vessels were also carrying Canadian reinforcements to the English west-coast port of Liverpool, where the ships docked on April 29.

Arriving in England the contingent entrained for the west coast of Scotland. By this time, the Regimental Depot at Ayr had already been in existence to serve as the base for the 2nd (Reserve) Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment for two years. It was from here – since November of 1915 and up until January of 1918 – that the new-comers from Newfoundland were to be despatched in drafts, at first to Gallipoli and later to the Western Front, to bolster the four fighting companies of 1st Battalion.

By the time that the Windsor Draft arrived at the Regimental Depot, 2nd (Reserve) Battalion was becoming critically short of personnel.

(Previous page: the new race-course at Ayr – opened in 1907 – where men of the Regiment were billeted and where they replaced some of the turf with a vegetable garden; part of the present grandstand is original – photo from 2012)

On June 11, 1917, the 25th Re-enforcement Draft – Private Emberly among its ranks - passed through the English south-coast port of Southampton on its way to France. On the following day, June 12, the contingent disembarked in the Norman capital, Rouen, where time was spent at the large British Expeditionary Force Base Depot, to be organized and to undergo final training* before moving onward to its eventual rendezvous with 1st Battalion.

(Right above: British troops disembark at Rouen on their way to the Western Front. – from Illustration)

*Apparently, the standard length of time for this final training at the outset of the war had been ten days – although this was to become more and more flexible as the War progressed - in areas near Rouen, Étaples, LeHavre and Harfleur that became known notoriously to the troops as the Bull Rings.

His records show that it was on July 2 – the Regimental War Diary says, in fact, on the day before - that Private Emberly's contingent of two-hundred fifty other ranks reported to duty at Caribou Camp, behind the lines near Woesten in Belgium. For the next few days – and nights – 1st Battalion supplied working parties for road-mending and for the construction of infantry tracks.

Only days before, at the end of June, the Newfoundlanders of 1st Battalion had once again moved north into Belgium and once again to the area of Ypres. This had been selected by the High Command to be the theatre of the British summer offensive of 1917. Officially named the Third Battle of Ypres, the campaign came to be known to history as Passchendaele, taking that name from a small village on a ridge that was one of the British Army's objectives.

(Right above: Troops file through the rubble of the medieval city of Ypres on their way to the front in the late summer of 1917. – from Illustration)

1st Battalion remained in Belgium until October 17, a small cog in the machinery of the British Army which floundered its way across the sodden countryside of Flanders. Notably it fought in two major engagements, at the Steenbeek on August 16, and at the Broembeek on October 9.

(continued)

(Page preceding: an unidentified – perhaps unidentifiable – part of the Passchendaele battlefield in the autumn of 1917 – from Illustration)

The son of Patrick Emberly, fisherman, and Margaret Emberly (née Vaters) – to whom he had allotted a daily fifty cents from his pay - of English Harbour East, Fortune Bay, he was also apparently one of ten siblings, two of them named Monica and Margaret-Helen.

Private Emberly was reported as having been killed in action on either October 8 or 9, 1917, while serving with 'C' Company during the action at the Broembeek. At home, it was the Reverend G.H. Hawkins of St. Jacques who was requested to bear the news to his family.

George Emberly had enlisted at the age of twenty-two years.

(Right above: Normally a nondescript, placid, stream, the Broembeek in October of 1917 had burst its banks and inundated the surrounding fields, transforming them into a quagmire. – photograph from 2010)

English H East
May 1 1918

Dear Sir

I am writing to tell you it is now over 2 months due me I would like to get it as we are in need of it we are ondely two old cripples that was our ondely support so pleas don't fail in sending it to us it was bad enough to lose him not to lose his money to from

Mr Patrick Emberley
English H East
Fortune Bay

my poor son's name was George Emberley

Private George Emberly was entitled to the British War Medal (on left) and also to the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal).

