

Private Hugh Walter McWhirter (elsewhere found as McWhorter) (Regimental Number 902) lies in Hill 10 Cemetery at Suvla Bay – Grave reference I. A. 4.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a brakeman with the Reid Newfoundland Railway, and earning a monthly forty-five dollars, Hugh Walter McWhirter presented himself for medical examination at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury on Harvey Road in St. John's, capital city of the Dominion of Newfoundland on the second day of January of the New Year of 1915. It was a procedure which was to pronounce him as...Fit for Foreign Service.

Just two days following this medical assessment, on January 4, Hugh Walter McWhirter returned to the C.L.B. Armoury to thereupon be enlisted – engaged at the private soldier's rate of a single dollar per diem plus a daily ten-cent Field Allowance.

However, whereas attestation for others had come about on the day of enlistment, he was now to await yet a further seventeen days, until January 21, before that final formality would come to pass.

Now for Private McWhirter, Number 902, there was now to be a nine-week waiting period. How he occupied himself during that time is not recorded among his papers; he may, of course, have temporarily returned to work – or perhaps home to the west coast - but this is only speculation.

Unlike the two previous contingents to have departed Newfoundland (see below) for...overseas service, Private McWhirter's 'D' Company was not to sail directly to the United Kingdom. On March 20, it embarked onto the Bowring-Brothers' vessel Stephano for the short voyage to Halifax, capital city of the Canadian province of Nova Scotia, where it was thereupon to board a second vessel, the newly-launched Orduña for the trans-Atlantic crossing*.

(Right above: The image of Orduña is from the Old Ship Picture Galleries web-site. The vessel was not to be requisitioned during the Great War but would be used by the Cunard Company to operate on its commercial service between Liverpool and New York.)

Having then sailed from Nova Scotia on March 22 for Liverpool, Private Morgan and his draft landed there eight days later, on the 30th. Once disembarked in Liverpool, the two-hundred fifty men and officers of 'D' Company were thereupon transported on the same date by train directly to Edinburgh, the Scottish capital, to join the Newfoundland Regiment's 'A', 'B' and 'C' Companies.

These units were by this time stationed at the historic Castle, 'A' and 'B' having recently been posted from Fort George and 'C' having arrived directly from home (see further below). After 'D' Company's arrival at the end of that month of March, the Newfoundlanders were now to remain at Edinburgh for the following six weeks.

Five to six months before that time, in the late summer and early autumn of 1914 there had been a period of training of some five weeks on the shores of Quidi Vidi Lake in the east end of St. John's for the newly-formed Newfoundland Regiment's first recruits – these to become 'A' and 'B' Companies - during which time the authorities had also been preparing for the Regiment's transfer overseas.

This first Newfoundland contingent was to embark on October 3, in some cases only days after a recruit's enlistment and/ or attestation. To become known to history as the First Five Hundred and also as the Blue Puttees, on that day they had boarded the Bowring Brothers' vessel Florizel awaiting in St. John's Harbour.

The ship had sailed for the United Kingdom on the morrow, October 4, 1914, to its rendezvous with the convoy carrying the 1st Canadian Division overseas, off the south coast of the Island.

In the United Kingdom this first Newfoundland contingent was to train in three venues during the late autumn of 1914 and then the winter of 1914-1915: firstly in southern England on the Salisbury Plain; then in Scotland at Fort George – on the Moray Firth close to Inverness; and lastly at Edinburgh Castle – where, as recorded beforehand, it was to provide the first garrison from outside the British Isles.

Only days after 'A' and 'B' Companies had taken up their posting there, on February 16 'C' Company – the first re-enforcements for the original contingent* - would arrive directly from Newfoundland.

**This contingent, while a part of the Newfoundland Regiment, was not yet a battalion and would not be so for a further five months – as will be seen below.*

As seen in a previous paragraph, for the month of April and the first days of May of 1915, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D' Companies, now united, were to furnish the garrison – the first troops from outside the British Isles to do so - of the guardian of Scotland's capital city. Then, during the first week of May, 'E' Company was to report there...to duty...from home. Four days later again, on May 11, the Newfoundland contingent was ordered elsewhere.

On that day, three weeks into spring – although in Scotland there was apparently still snow - the entire Newfoundland unit was dispatched to Stobs Camp, all under canvas and south-eastwards of Edinburgh, in the vicinity of the town of Hawick.

It was to be at Stobs Camp that the Newfoundland contingent would eventually receive the re-enforcements from home – 'F' Company which arrived on July 10, 1915 - that would bring its numbers up to that of British Army establishment battalion strength*. The now-formed 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment was thus rendered available to be sent on 'active service'.

**This was approximately fifteen hundred, sufficient to furnish two re-enforcement companies and a headquarters staff.*

At the beginning of that August of 1915, the four senior Companies, 'A', 'B', 'C' and 'D', were then sent south from Stobs Camp to undergo a final two weeks of training, as well as an inspection by the King, at Aldershot. This force, now the 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment, was thereupon attached to the 88th Brigade of the 29th Division of the (British) Mediterranean Expeditionary Force.

Meanwhile the two junior Companies, 'E' – last arrived at Edinburgh - and the aforementioned 'F', were ordered transferred to Scotland's west coast, to Ayr, there to provide the nucleus of the newly-forming 2nd (Reserve) Battalion.

It was while the Newfoundland Battalion was in training during those weeks at Aldershot, on August 15 that Private McWhirter would be prevailed upon to enlist for the duration of the conflict.

**At the outset of the War, perhaps because it was felt by the authorities that it would be a conflict of short duration, the recruits enlisted for only a single year. As the War progressed, however, this was obviously going to cause problems and the men were encouraged to re-enlist.*

On August 20, 1915, Private McWhirter and his Newfoundland unit embarked in the Royal Navy Harbour of Devonport onto the requisitioned passenger-liner Megantic for passage to the Middle East and to the fighting against the Turks. There, a month later – having spent some two weeks billeted in British barracks in the vicinity of the Egyptian capital, Cairo - on September 20, the 1st Battalion was to land at Suvla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

When the Newfoundlanders landed from their transport ship at Suvla Bay on that September night of 1915 they were to disembark into a campaign that was already on the threshold of collapse.

One of the problems at Suvla Bay – and elsewhere – was that of poor leadership. Having landed there practically unopposed in August, the generals had ordered the troops to consolidate their positions on the low ground just forward of the beaches. The Turks – thanks to this ineptitude of the British High Command – had occupied the horse-shoe of hills surrounding the area and by the time of the Newfoundland Battalion's arrival had surrounded and dominated the British positions.

And even though they were often short of artillery shells, from their positions they were able to contain the tardy British efforts and to make life utterly miserable for the disembarked troops.

Two days after their arrival, the Newfoundlanders were subject to a heavy bombardment and Private McWhirter – while serving in the trenches with 'D' Company - became the victim of a high-explosive shell.

The son of Henry McWhirter, and Lottie (Charlotte) McWhirter (née Harris) – who used to knit and send socks to both her serving sons, and to whom he had allotted a daily fifty cents from his pay - of Humbermouth (formerly Riverhead), Bay of Islands - he was also brother to Peter, Marie-Anne, Myrtle-Lydia, George-William*, John-H., Cecil, Jane, Robert and to Susie.

Documented as being native to New Richmond, Bonaventure, in the Canadian Province of Québec*, Private McWhirter was recorded as having been killed in action on September 22, 1915. At home, it was the Reverend W. Cotton of the Bay of Islands who was requested to bear the news to his family.

He was the first member of the Newfoundland Regiment to lose his life in action during the course of the Great War.

Walter McWhirter had enlisted at a declared twenty years of age; date of birth in New Richmond, Québec, March 18, 1894 (from Québec Vital and Church Records, Drouin Collection).

**The family had immigrated to the Canadian province of Québec in 1893.*

(The photograph of Private Hugh Walter McWhirter is from the Provincial Archives.)

Private Hugh Walter McWhirter was entitled to the 1914-1915 Star, as well as to the British War Medal (centre) and to the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal) (right).
