

Private Albert Pearcey (Regimental Number 14039, 15th (The King's) Hussars) is interred in Boulogne Eastern Cemetery – Grave reference VIII.A.62.

His occupations prior to military service in the Army were apparently all on board ship. It is documented that he was a crew member on HMS Brilliant* on two occasions: from May 23 of 1907 until August 28, some three months later; then from November 7 of that same year until April 29 of 1908.

Apparently Rating Pearcey deserted HMS Brilliant on that first occasion and was tried and imprisoned for thirty days during that interim period for having done so.

On April 30, 1908, he was transferred to HMS Sappho and there remained as a member of her crew for but a week, until May 7.

*HMS Brilliant (above) and HMS Sappho were two Appollo-Class cruisers: during the period of 1906 to 1911, Brilliant was at first on the Royal Navy's North American Station and later attached to the West Indies Station; Sappho was in 1906 attached to the Newfoundland fishery before then, like Brilliant, serving with the North American then West Indies Stations.

Not long after his service with the Royal Navy, Albert Pearcey sailed as a steward on board the new Allan Line steamer Victorian on its Great Britain-North America runs, earning the sum of  $\pounds 3/10/-$  (three pounds ten shillings) per month. Then on July(?) 22 of 1912, he signed onto a steward's position with the ship Orcoma where he likely remained until the time of his enlistment.

(Right above: The Pacific Steam Navigation Company vessel Orcoma mainly served on the Liverpool to South America routes. In April of 1915 she was requisitioned by the Admiralty to serve as an Armed Merchant Cruiser which she did until April of 1918. – photograph from the Naval History web site)

Albert Pearcey enlisted into the 15th Hussars (The King's) in the port-city of Southampton. The date of his joining-up seems not to be among the available documents but it was almost certainly near to the end of 1914 as recruits customarily underwent fourteen weeks of training, and Private Pearcey was recorded as entering a theatre of war – France – on April 23, 1915.

He must have travelled as part of a re-enforcement draft as the 15th Hussars were by then already on the Continent. The force had landed in Rouen as a part of the Cavalry Division on August 18, 1914, before its three squadrons were separated to serve in the British 1st, 2nd and 3rd Divisions. On the 14th of April of the following year, the three squadrons were united once more as a unit of the 9th Cavalry Brigade, itself a unit of the 1st Cavalry Division, and stationed near the northern French community of La Kreule.

(Right above: A cavalry unit during a moment of repose somewhere in France in the autumn of 1914. – from The War Illustrated)

(continued)

Soon after his arrival on that April 23, Private Pearcey and the 9th Cavalry Brigade were ordered into Belgium, and to the Ypres Salient. The Salient was to prove to be one of the most lethal theatres of the entire Western Front although, being cavalry, the Brigade was to remain on the periphery for a while rather than being in the trenches – but only for a while.

However, the 2nd Battle of Ypres – officially, in British Histories, fought from April 22 until May 25 – was at its opening; soon the high casualty list would require that the horse soldiers fight dismounted alongside the regular infantry.

On one of the last days of the battle in which the officers and men of the 9th Cavalry Brigade played their role as foot soldiers, May 24, the casualty list recorded by the War Diarist included: 24 OR (other ranks) killed in action, 117 OR wounded, and 22 OR missing in action. The unit retired early on the morrow to Wormhoudt, to the west of Ypres.

(Right above: the city of Ypres towards the end of 1915 – some eight months after the 1st Cavalry Division arrived on the scene: it was already looking much like this by the end of May, 1915 – from a vintage post-card)

It appears not to be documented as to when Private Pearcey was wounded, although it is highly unlikely to have been later than May 24, the Brigade having retired on that date and no further losses reported in the Brigade War Diary entries for the following days. Nor is there any report as to where he might have received preliminary medical care.

But by June 1st he was reported as having been admitted for treatment into the 13th General Hospital in the French port of Boulogne.

(Right above: Boulogne at or about the time of the Great War – from a vintage post-card)

The son of the late (by the time of enlistment) Isaac Pearcey, former mariner, and of Caroline Pearcey (née Mugford) of 58, Lime Street, St. John's, he was also brother to at least two older siblings: Emily-Jane and George-Samuel.

Private Pearcey was reported as having died of wounds in the same 13th General Hospital on that June 1, 1915. He had been on active service only forty days.

He was twenty-four years of age at his death: date of birth, April 24, 1891(?) (Wesleyan Parish Records). (An official source has 24/4/1889)

Private Albert Pearcey was entitled to the 1914-1915 Star, as well as to the British War Medal (centre) and to the Victory Medal (Inter-Allied War Medal) (right).

The above dossier has been researched, compiled and produced by Alistair Rice. Please email any suggested amendments or content revisions if desired to criceadam@yahoo.ca. Last updated – February 18, 2023.