

Private Frank H. Roberts (Regimental Number 383) lies in Hill 10 Cemetery at Suvla Bay – Grave reference IV. A. 1.

His occupation prior to military service recorded as that of a grocer's clerk working with Marshall Bros., General Importers, for eight dollars per week, Frank Roberts presented himself at the Church Lads Brigade Armoury on Harvey Road in St. John's, capital city of the Dominion of Newfoundland, on August 25 of 1914 – just exactly three weeks after the Declaration of War – for a medical examination. It was an exercise which was to pronounce him as...Fit for Foreign Service.

Eleven days later, on September 5, Frank Roberts returned to the *C.L.B. Armoury, on this second occasion for enlistment, whereupon he was engaged at the private soldier's daily rate of a single dollar plus a ten-cent per diem Field Allowance. A recruit of the First Draft, he was likely now ordered to the tented area by that time established on the shores of Quidi Vidi Lake in the East End of St. John's where a four-five week course of training was already under way.

It was a place that Frank Roberts probably knew quite well since he was a member of that organization, even to the point of using its banking facilities to save a daily seventy cents from his pay.*

The regimental authorities were also busy by now, preparing for the transport of this, the first body of volunteers, to overseas - and later to active – service.

At the beginning of the month of October a large number of the new recruits underwent attestation; Private Roberts was one of that number, taking his oath of allegiance on the second day of October.

Two days later, after the Newfoundland contingent – it was not as yet a battalion – of ‘A’ and ‘B’ Companies had paraded through the city, it embarked onto the Bowring Brothers’ vessel Florizel which was awaiting in St. John’s Harbour.

Private Roberts and his comrades-in-arms of the First Five Hundred – also to be known to history as the Blue Puttees – were now to sit on board ship for the best part of a day as it was not to be until the morrow that Florizel would sail to the south coast of the Island and to its rendezvous with the convoy carrying the Canadian Division to the United Kingdom.

In the United Kingdom this first Newfoundland contingent was to train in three venues during the late autumn of 1914 and then the winter of 1914-1915: firstly in southern England on the Salisbury Plain; then in Scotland at Fort George – on the Moray Firth close to Inverness; and lastly at Edinburgh Castle where the unit was to provide the first garrison from outside the British Isles.

Some three months later, on May 11, and some seven weeks into spring – although in Scotland there was apparently still snow - the entire Newfoundland unit – by now ‘A’ and ‘B’ Companies re-enforced by ‘C’, ‘D’, and ‘E’ - was ordered moved from the Scottish capital to Stobs Camp, all under canvas and south-eastwards of Edinburgh, in the vicinity of the town of Hawick.

It was to be at Stobs Camp that the Newfoundland contingent received the re-enforcements from home – ‘F’ Company which arrived on July 10, 1915 - that would bring its numbers up to that of British Army establishment battalion strength*. The now-formed 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment was thus rendered ready to be ordered on ‘active service’.

The number was about fifteen hundred, sufficient to provide four ‘fighting’ companies, two re-enforcement companies and a headquarters staff.*

At the beginning of that August of 1915, the four senior Companies, ‘A’, ‘B’, ‘C’ and ‘D’ – Private Neville among their ranks - were then sent south from Stobs Camp to undergo a final two weeks of training, as well as an inspection by the King, at Aldershot.

This force, now designated as the 1st Battalion of the Newfoundland Regiment, was thereupon attached to the 88th Brigade of the 29th Division of the (British) Mediterranean Expeditionary Force.

Meanwhile the two junior companies, the later-arrived ‘E’ and the aforementioned last-arrived ‘F’, were ordered transferred to Scotland’s west coast, to Ayr, there to provide the nucleus of the newly-forming 2nd (Reserve) Battalion.

It was also during this period while at Aldershot that on August 13 Private Roberts was prevailed upon to re-enlist, on this occasion for the *duration of the war.

At the outset of the War, perhaps because it was felt by the authorities that it would be a conflict of short duration, the recruits enlisted for a single year. As the War progressed, however, this was likely to cause problems and the men were encouraged to re-enlist.*

While 'E' and 'F' Companies were beginning their posting to the Regimental Depot at Ayr, on August 20 of 1915 the 1st Battalion embarked in the Royal Navy Harbour of Plymouth-Devonport onto the requisitioned passenger-liner Megantic for passage to the Middle East and to the fighting against the Turks.

There, a month later – having spent some two weeks billeted in British barracks in the vicinity of the Egyptian capital, Cairo - on September 20 the 1st Battalion was to land at Suvla Bay on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

When the Newfoundlanders landed from their transport ship at Suvla Bay on that September night of 1915 they would disembark into a campaign that was already on the threshold of collapse.

Not only in the area where the Newfoundland Battalion was to serve but, even ever since the very first days of the operation in April of 1915, the entire Gallipoli Campaign, including the operation at Suvla Bay, had proved to be little more than a debacle:

Flies, dust, disease, the frost-bite and the floods – and of course the casualties inflicted by an enemy who was to fight a great deal better than the British High Command* had ever anticipated – were eventually to overwhelm the British-led forces and those of the French, and it would finally be decided to abandon not only Suvla Bay but the entire Gallipoli venture.

Many of the commanders chosen were second-rate, had been brought out of retirement, and had little idea of how to fight – let alone of how to win. One of the generals at Suvla, apparently, had handed in his resignation during the Campaign and had just gone home.*

On October 22 of 1915 those men of 'B' Company who were not sick were in the firing line. Lieutenant Owen Steele's Diary – he was sick himself on that day - does not report any infantry activity thus it is likely that the almost constant enemy artillery-fire was to be responsible for the casualties of that day.

Private Roberts incurred gun-shot wounds – probably from flying shrapnel - to the right buttock and the left side and was evacuated from the field to the 26th Casualty Clearing Station – where his injuries were considered to be dangerous by the medical staff.

The son of Samuel Roberts, a cooper employed by Baine Johnson, and of Julia Roberts (née Parmiter)* of 7, Balsam Street, he was also brother to six siblings: Jeanie-Parmiter, Minnie, Arthur, Violet, Walter and Ada.

Private Roberts was reported as having died of wounds on October 23, 1915, by the Officer Commanding the same 26th Casualty Clearing Station.

Frank Roberts had enlisted at a declared twenty-two years of age: date of birth in St. John's, Newfoundland, March 27, 1892 (from the Newfoundland Birth Register).
